The Viennese painter Oswald Grill studied at the Wiener Kunstgewerbeschule (Vienna School of Arts and Crafts) and at the Munich Art Academy. Among other things, he worked as a freelance artist in Dachau. In 1908, he became a member of the Wiener Künstlerhaus and was president of the Central Association of Austrian Visual Artists from 1917 to 1938. In 1929, he was appointed professor and received several other important awards.

Whereas the artist's oeuvre included mainly landscape depictions, some portraits are also known. The lively exchange within the artist community in Vienna as well as his membership at the Wiener Künstlerhaus prompted Grill to explore new styles in the period around 1908.
