This remarkable Viennese frame was made around 1900 and reflects the international vocabulary of Art Nouveau while remaining firmly rooted in the broader context of Viennese Jugendstil.

Its flowing silhouette and stylised floral carvings show particularly strong affinities with the organically inspired forms of French Art Nouveau. At the same time, the increasingly abstract treatment of the ornament gives the design a distinctly Viennese character.

Particularly striking is the contrast between the dark stained and lacquered hardwood, the green-tinted carvings and the delicate polished brass details. The floral decoration seems to spread across the surface of the frame, while the restrained brass elements lend structure to its otherwise freely flowing design.
